Credit Unions In The Metaverse

Imagine a world where traditional banks never existed and where credit unions were the only financial institutions. A reality where the word "banking" was never in the American lexicon and the acronym FDIC stood for the Fire Department Instructors Conference. This is not a science fiction movie, nor the Twilight Zone, but rather a very possible reality in a spatial computing dimension that could redefine how credit unions do business. Just think, how would credit unions describe everyday transactions that are processed? What language would be deployed to shape the vernacular of a frontier yet to be pioneered? What is banking anyway and why would it find relevance among the next generations of potential members in the metaverse?
